

CRYING SALVATION ALOUD.

THE OSTRICH WALTZ.

An Odd Sight in the Central Park Beer Pad—dock—How to Pluck an Ostrich.

Mr. J. Protheroe, the young Englishman who has in Central Park a herd of 22 ostriches recently imported from Buenos Ayres for breeding in America, went yesterday morning with his herdsman, an eben Cape Town, named Johnson, and a Sun reporter, to the deer hut in which the birds are confined. When Johnson opened the door he was greeted by a series of sounds suggestive of the noise made by a fog horn.

"What's that? the Dutch natives of Cape Town call 'bromming,'" said Mr. Protheroe. "It expresses the same feeling with an ostrich that cooing does with a dove. I'll show you how we pluck an ostrich. Johnson, bring the stocking."

The dark herder, whom the birds regarded with mild-eyed affection, produced a long, white stocking.

He caught one of the birds by its neck, and inserted the head and neck in the stocking. The result irresistibly recalled the pictures of Bedouins in Bernhardi's gloves.

The bird tried to extricate itself, however.

"This bird has been long in confinement," said Mr. Protheroe, "that they are comparatively gentle when the stocking is pulled over their heads."

"Lived in Hoboken all that time?"

"Is this Post Office?" the nearest one to your place of residence?

Hughes is the name of my clerk; he lives here, and the book is mine, and gets the mail; or I'm passing, Tietze?"

The Postmaster says you have called for it every day since the advertisement first appeared.

"Well, I want you to understand I'm a responsible business man. My name is James Tietze, and I have an office at 9 Murray street, New York."

The reporter asked more questions. Mr. Tietze was evidently in the old fashioned way.

"I am the author of the book."
